Lucky Star Casino attacked by ransomware

Rosemary Stephens
Editor-in-Chief

(CONCHO, OK) Lucky Star Casino becomes the latest victim of ransomware attacks in a long list of businesses, city and government agencies, public school systems and hospitals who have already been affected by ransomware attacks.

In recent months Sugar Creek Casino, the city of Tulsa and the Menominee Casino Resort in Keshena, WI have all been victims of external computer attacks.

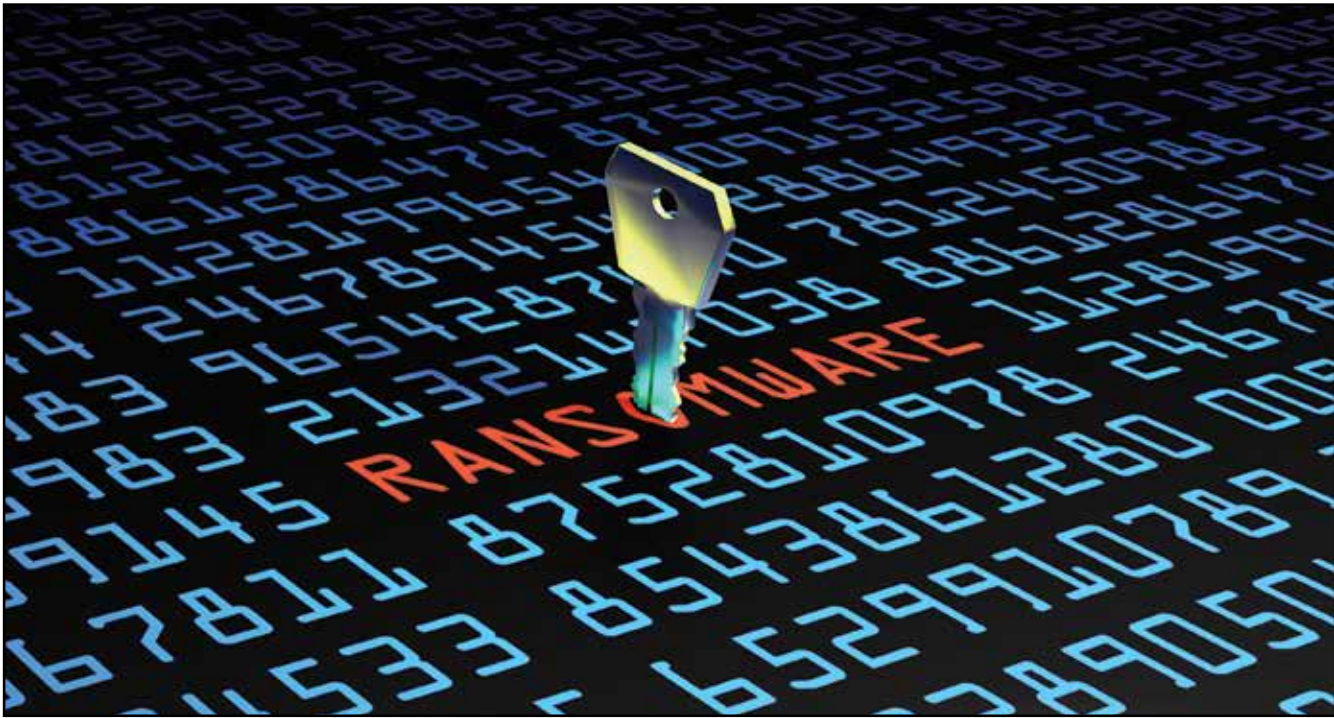

In a statement released on June 21, 2021, it stated, “Lucky Star Casino has unfortunately joined the growing list of government agencies, businesses and other casinos to be hit by a ransomware attack. The security and confidentiality of all data are a top priority for us. Therefore, we immediately notified federal law enforcement including the FBI.”

Lucky Star Casino, owned by the Cheyenne and Arapaho Tribes, shut their operations down on Saturday, June 18 immediately after becoming aware of a computer cyber-attack.

“The forensic cyber professionals we called in have traced the attack to Bulgaria, but from there it is almost impossible to locate for this new facility and the governor’s ideas for this was mind blowing and it’s all happening.”

The food pantry will be providing USDA food services for tribal citizens in Canadian and Kingfisher counties, as well as providing food boxes to tribal families in need.

Broken system can’t keep track of Native deaths

From medical health privacy laws to a maze of siloed information systems, a true accounting of COVID-19’s impact on Indian Country is impossible to know

*By Jourdan Bennett-Begaye,

Indigenous Investigative Collective*

In May of 2020, the Navajo Nation reported one of the highest per-capita COVID-19 infection rates in the United States. Since that milestone, official data reveals that the Navajo Nation has been one of the hardest-hit populations during the pandemic. The Navajo Nation boasts the largest population of any Indigenous nation in the United States, and thousands of Navajos live outside the nation, in towns along the border, cities across the country, and in other parts of the world, making it difficult to tally the virus’ impacts on Navajo citizens.

It’s made worse by a labyrinthian system of local, state, federal and tribal data-reporting systems that often do not communicate with each other or share information. In an effort to come up with a more reliable fatality count, reporters with the Indigenous Investigative Collective made multiple public-records requests for death records held by state medical examiners of Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona and Utah. Those requests focused on the counties on or adjacent to the Navajo Nation where many Navajo families live. The states rejected those requests, citing privacy concerns, preventing independent analysis of those records to determine death rates. Experts also cite pervasive misidentification of race and ethnicity of victims at critical data collection points, making the true toll of the pandemic on the Navajo Nation impossible to ever know.

The Indigenous Investigative Collective has found that those data problems extend nationwide. As of June 2, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention estimates that 6,585 American Indians and Alaska Natives have died from COVID-19 — the highest rate of any ethnic group in the United States. That estimate likely falls far short of the actual death toll.

“Even though right now we’re showing as having some of the highest death rates, it’s a gross undercount,” said Abigail Echo-Hawk, Pawnee, director of the Urban Indian Health Institute based in Seattle, Washington, one of 12 nationally recognized tribal epidemiology centers in the country.

That undercount leaves researchers and epidemiolo-

Cheyenne and Arapaho Tribes R.E.Sp.E.C.T. program host Summer STEM camps for tribal youth

Latoya Lonelodge
Staff Reporter

While the Cheyenne and Arapaho Tribes R.E.Sp.E.C.T. program (acronym for Recreation, Exercise, and Sports for the Elders and Children of our Tribes), has focused primarily on sporting events and activities for youth in the past, they’re coming back full swing amid a COVID-19 pandemic with activities for all youth to participate in for summertime fun.

Starting June 7 through July 28, the R.E.Sp.E.C.T. program will host a summer program with Mad Science called Summer STEMs Camp. The camp will take place in and around various communities to include all tribal youth from areas such as El Reno, Oklahoma City, Kingfisher, Calumet, Canton, Geary, Watonga, Weatherford, Thomas, Seiling and Woodward.

With the addition of the Summer STEMs camps, the R.E.Sp.E.C.T. program strives to bring educational materials into the program, allowing youth to learn and have fun at the same time. Jessi James, director of the R.E.Sp.E.C.T. program, said the reason the program wanted to incorporate the STEMs camps is because they haven’t done a lot of educational events in the past.

“When I got in touch with STEMs they were telling me all the different activities they would do and I thought it sounded fun, not just fun, but youth can also learn. I brought the STEMs program into the Respect program hoping to direct them a little more toward education as well,” James said.

On June 14, STEMs held the Monday camp at the R.E.Sp.E.C.T. Gym in Concho, Okla., where youth in grades kindergarten to 8th grade joined to participate in the day’s STEM-related activities.

For the afternoon session, 6th through 8th graders, the Crazy Chemistry session was conducted. Youth from the surrounding communities of El Reno, Oklahoma City, Kingfisher and Calumet were in attendance to actively participate in learning about chemicals and doing hands-on experiments.

Amya Eaglenest, 12, said she attended the STEMs camp because she really likes science and wanted to give the camp a try as she’s never attended a STEMs camp before.

Amya said in coming to the camp, her dad mentioned all the experiments they would do and it sounded fun.

“I like science, I like answering the questions a lot too, mostly about the planets, it’s fun,” Amya said.

Phallyn McHenry, 14, said when she decided to come to the STEMs camp she didn’t know what to expect at first.

“I just didn’t know what it would be like and I just figured if you come to these events, then the tribes will put more activities out there for you to do,” Phallyn said.

Phallyn said this was her first time attending a STEMs

Oklahoma health leaders monitoring, warning of Delta COVID-19 variant in OK

(OKLAHOMA CITY - KFOR) Life is beginning to feel more normal as we emerge from the COVID-19 pandemic, but medical experts are warning of the threats variants of concern present to the unvaccinated.

According to the most recent numbers from the state, 36.7% of eligible residents are fully vaccinated.

“We can’t just forget about it because there’s still a threat,” said Dr. George Monks, former President of the Oklahoma State Medical Association.

Even as the masks have started to come off across the country, Monks has remained focused on the threat COVID-19 presents to Oklahomans.

“We’ve had about 40 cases of this Delta variant and it is significant because it’s more infectious and it causes more severe disease,” he said.

The Delta Variant was originally found in India and is likely to become the dominant variant in the United States. The Delta variant, also known as B.1.617.2 and first identified in India, is more contagious and resistant to vaccines than the dominant Alpha (U.K.) strain circulating in the U.S. and also carries a greater risk of hospitalization.

The number one symptom is headache, then followed by sore throat, runny nose and fever.” More “traditional” Covid symptoms such as a cough and loss of smell were much rarer now he said, with younger people experiencing much more of a bad cold or “funny off feeling.

Monks says the 40 cases in Oklahoma are just the ones we know of.

“We’re the only state in the United States that has a pandemic center and yet we actually rank last in the United States in the overall number of tests we’re doing for variants of concern,” he said.

Vaccines are the best way to protect against these variants and the latest numbers show less than 40% of eligible Oklahomans have rolled up their sleeves. However, children under the age of 12 are unable to receive vaccinations.

As other states offer incentives like lotteries to encourage folks to get their shot, Monks says that might be something Oklahoma should look into. However, your safety should be the biggest incentive.

“Sometimes people just want to know that it’s safe and effective and they want the vaccine to be out for a while, but this one is probably more safe than any other vaccine we’ve had,” said Monks. “It’s very effective at preventing severe disease and hospitalization. It can save your life.”

As of the latest state epidemiology report, more than 63% of Oklahomans ages 65 and up are fully vaccinated, the highest percentage per age group.

The number drops to a little more than 45% for those aged 50-64.

COVID-19 DEATHS

gists completely in the dark when creating practices and policies to deal with future pandemics.

When the coronavirus hit the Navajo Nation, Utah Navajo Health System was at the forefront of providing testing. The private, not-for-profit corporation is tribally run and provides services to the Navajo Nation as well as rural Native and non-Native Utah communities. From the start of the pandemic, the UNHS data team reported its information to the state of Utah, local Indian Health Service units and the Navajo Nation’s epidemiology center.

“We pretty much tracked anything that we were doing,” Verlyn Hawks, director of health information systems for Utah Navajo, said. “The scope of what we could handle is basically what we did.”

At first it was just test results, then deaths, and now vaccines. Hawks said he and his team reached out to neighboring health-care facilities like Northern Navajo Medical Center in Shiprock, New Mexico, to ask for COVID-19 data from their service area and would provide them with data. From there, he said, data was reported to the state of Utah and then passed to the CDC.

“But we really don’t have a good way to know where our numbers are going and what’s happening from there,” Hawks said, adding that the process for the Indian Health Service was equally opaque. “There’s no sharing between states.”

On the Navajo Nation, efforts to track cases, vaccinations and deaths are also complicated by the fact that community members move freely between health-care facilities, registering at different hospitals and clinics.

“Patients on the Navajo reservation tend to be kind of transient, meaning they go to different places for care,” Utah Navajo’s Chief Executive Officer Michael Jensen said.

Take for example a patient at Utah Navajo who tests positive for COVID-19, becomes ill, and seeks treatment at that Utah Navajo health center. If that patient becomes critically ill, Utah Navajo would transfer the patient to a nearby hospital, and if that patient were to die from COVID-19 complications, the hospital they were transferred to may or may not report the death back to Utah Navajo, where the patient originally registered. The same is true for vaccines and COVID-19 results.

“Our systems can gather all kinds of data and run reports every way but sideways,” Jensen said. “But the transient part of that makes it more challenging, and obviously if somebody passes in an inpatient facility, we’re not notified unless we follow up with the family or the doctor calls.”

Tracking Indigenous COVID-19 patients accurately would involve the entire health system, which is made up of IHS health facilities, tribally owned facilities, tribal hospitals, urban Indian health programs, private clinics and other non-IHS health facilities, like city, county or private hospitals. No agency is consistently or reliably doing that.

IHS, which collects data from Indigenous nations that volunteer to share, instead relies on the CDC’s National Vital Statistics System, which receives its information from states. “We’re not [tracking COVID-19 deaths] because we want to avoid any underreporting,” said IHS Acting Director Elizabeth Fowler, a Comanche citizen and a descendant of the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians.

The CDC, however, is also likely undercounting. For the Urban Indian Health Institute’s Echo-Hawk, a reliable database is the APM Research Lab, which reported at least 5,477 Indigenous deaths as of March 2, based on figures from all 50 states and Washington, D.C. Around the same time, the CDC was reporting 5,462 deaths.

All deaths, regardless of where they occur, are reported to the state, but the states have refused to release those details. The Indigenous Investigative Collective requested dates, cause and location of death, race, ethnicity, age, gender and a specific request for COVID-related information, including whether or not the infection may have occurred at a work site. Those requests were rejected by records custodians in Arizona, New Mexico, Utah and Colorado, citing privacy and protected health information, obscuring information for COVID-19 deaths in dozens of tribal communities in those four states combined.

New Mexico, in particular, further explained the denial of public records, stating, “The information contained in the responsive records consists of protected health information and information reasonably believed to allow identification of patients.” New Mexico Department of Health Records Custodian Deniece Griego-Martinez said even with names and case numbers redacted, patients could still be identified. “Since this information is identifying on its own and in combination with other publicly available information, it is not possible to redact the responsive records.”

Gaps in states’ COVID-19 data often begin right after a person has died. The process for determining and recording the cause of death varies from state to state. In Minnesota, for example, cause of death is registered by medical certifiers such as physicians, medical examiners and coroners. If a person dies from COVID-19, the cause of death on the certificate may say respiratory or heart failure — the reasons for those failures are not included.

Minnesota funeral director Robert Gill, Sisseton Wahpeton Oyate, said when he sits down to fill out vital statistics forms with a deceased’s family members, most of the work is straightforward: legal name, address at the time of death, social security number, next of kin, parents, children, siblings and details of funeral arrangements. Where it can get tricky is when he needs to include the person’s race and ethnicity.

“They could say, ‘I’m Swedish, African, German, Native American, Hawaiian, Puerto Rican all mixed in one,’ so then I’d ask the family, ‘Well what would you like? What are you, what would you legally consider yourself?’” Gill said. There’s no limit on how many races or tribes can be written down, and often everything is included. He also doesn’t differentiate between individuals who are enrolled in a federally recognized tribe or are descendants or simply community members.

“I write down what they would consider their race. Whether it gets recorded as that, I don’t know,” he said. “I send that into the state and I don’t know what they do with it.”

In Gill’s facility, identifying American Indian or Alaska Native people is part of the job. But in other parts of the country where medical examiners or funeral homes have no knowledge of Indian Country, those individuals can be identified as Hispanic, Asian or any other incorrect ethnicity, because medical workers, funeral home directors and coroners simply look at the body and make a decision. While no data exists for death-certificate undercounts of Indigenous people, a 2016 report from the National Center for Health Statistics concluded that of everyone who self-identified as American Indian or Alaska Native on the U.S. Census, 48.6 percent were classified as another race on their death certificate.

“There are so many different ways that these death certificates are improperly categorized for race and ethnicity,” Echo-Hawk said. “But the number one issue ends up being nobody asks the family.”

The CDC website states that “cause-of-death information is not perfect, but it is very useful.” While the agency estimates that 20 to 30 percent of death certificates have issues with completeness, the agency adds: “This does not mean they are inaccurate.” The agency did not respond to requests for comment on this story.

The IHS has tried to correct the problem and continues to do so, with little success so far. In a 2020

COVID-19 response hearing, the chief medical officer for the IHS, Rear Admiral Michael Toedt, testified that the agency was working with the CDC to address the issue of racial misclassification through training. However, Toedt stressed that the main problem with collecting good, timely data for American Indian and Alaska Native deaths rested almost entirely on how the death certificate was filled out.

In short, death counts of Indigenous people, no matter how they died, are woefully inaccurate — and correcting that is likely impossible without a unified system for tracking health issues in Native communities, and regulations requiring death certificates to accurately reflect a person’s Indigenous citizenship, race and ethnicity. Experts who spoke with the Indigenous Investigative Collective could not give an exact number for the undercount.

A 2021 Urban Indian Health Institute report card that grades the quality of collecting and reporting COVID-19 data for Indigenous people gives most states a C grade or lower. The states were graded on the inclusion of Native people and statistics on state health dashboards, as well as accurate CDC data for Indigenous people. That information, Echo-Hawk said, helps leaders make decisions and scientists think through vaccine allocations, and helps measure success or failure in the health system.

The omission of data on Native communities, Echo-Hawk said, is “data genocide,” contributing to the elimination of Native people in the public eye and aiding the federal government in abandoning treaty laws and trust responsibilities. In other words, no data on Native people means no need to meet obligations or provide resources.

“We definitely are in a situation where we are not capturing all of the impacts, and we are not capturing all of the deaths for American Indians and Alaska Natives. So, we know that the picture, the true picture, is actually worse than what the data tells us,” Carolyn Angus-Hornbuckle said, who is Mohawk and the chief operating officer and policy center director of the National Indian Health Board. “That information is needed because like every other government that’s facing this crisis, our tribal nations need to have real-time, accurate data so that they can protect their citizens.”

Meanwhile, infection rates and deaths in the Navajo Nation are improving, but Utah Navajo Health System CEO

Michael Jensen said their work continues. “We’ve done our own contact tracing to find out where it started and who those people are interacting with. We’ve tried to share that publicly, for deceased rates, I think communities should know what’s going on,” he said.

“I hope everybody would want to provide the most accurate and true numbers possible.”

camp as well.

“I’m not really a science person but I know science, like I’m really good at it, whenever they’d ask questions and I actually knew the answers to it, they would be like, ‘oh my gosh yes,’ and I was like, ‘oh okay,’” Phallyn said smiling confidently.

In growing interest in the STEMs camp, Phallyn said she’s looking forward to attending the next weeks camp as well.

“What I learned most about is the chemical and physical changes and my favorite was making slime,” Phallyn said.

In partnering with Mad Science, a corporation based out of Edmond, Okla., James said the STEMs camps are starting off to a good start for the summer.

“Especially here in El Reno, we have Oklahoma City also and Yukon, it’s going good, we’re getting about 40 kids right now, last week they had summer schools that are still finishing, this week they still have the Darlington basketball camp, so hopefully in a couple weeks we intend to double those numbers,” James said.

Whitney Clear, Mad Science scientist, said Mad Science holds different science camps and after school programs for children ages pre-k to 8th grade, and sometimes even older.

“We book with tons of different communities and different schools and just try to bring science to the summer, but make it fun,” Clear said.

Clear said while there’s science during the school year, sometimes it can get a little boring alongside other school subjects.

“So it’s fun to make it exciting and engage everybody in the different experience,” Clear said.

With the day’s activities starting off with younger grades kindergarten through 5th grade in the morning time and ending the day with the older grades, Clear said the experiments and activities taught went really well.

“Of course, everybody can be a little hectic sometimes especially with the little kids, they’re really excited to get their hands on everything, luckily for the kids, nothings bad to touch, so if they did come up and do their own thing it was totally fine,” Clear said.

Along with experimenting chemicals, youth were encouraged to learn about the weather and learned to make slime.

“My sister Evan Clear, she did a space experiment, and we didn’t get to the birds experiment because everybody was really interested in the weather today, but the older kids I think they really liked the chemical reactions and the experiments, especially the acetone peanut one because that was unexpected and of course everybody loves slime,” Clear said.

In the midst of the COVID-19 pandemic, Clear said Mad Science had just recently started going back out into communities continuing their camps and science activities.

Aiyana Dugger, 11, Lariah Dugger, 10, and Amya Eaglenest, 12, smile at making their own batch of slime. (Photo / Latoya Lonelodge)

“We’re trying to get that science rush back and we’ve been going all around Oklahoma, like hours and hours away, sometimes to Kansas, just to teach kids some science,” Clear said.

In bringing more awareness to the importance behind STEM (Science, Technology, Engineering and Mathematics), Clear said it’s hard sometimes for children to get a good science influence, especially when it’s not during the school year.

“I was kind of turned away from science as a girl and who knows what could’ve happened, like I’m happy where I am now and to continue to teach science and do that,” Clear said.

Clear said she don’t want anybody to feel like they can’t do anything because they’re a girl, a person of color, or they’re different.

“There’s so many things we can do in advance, this is just like a steppingstone to let kids know I can change the world with science by starting with slime,” Clear said.

The Summer STEMs Camps for R.E.Sp.E.C.T. continues throughout the week in different communities, focusing on reaching more youth in and around Cheyenne and Arapaho country.

For more information about Summer STEMs Camp or to sign up for the next community STEMs camp, contact R.E.Sp.E.C.T. at 405-422-7570, 405-422-7572, 405-422-7578 or 405-422-7585.

the exact person or persons responsible,” Cheyenne and Arapaho Tribes’ Gov. Reggie Wassana said.

Gov. Wassana said the FBI advised them to not negotiate on the ransom.

“We are covered up to a certain dollar amount through our insurance and our cyber professionals are cleaning up the servers, and since we had a backup system, we are able to reboot the servers, reinstall the programs needed, and they are adding more security and safeguards,” Gov. Wassana said.

It is anticipated the Lucky Star Casino in Concho, Okla., will be back up and running within the next two days, with the other casinos following shortly after.

“We will have to go to each casino one by one and do the same thing with them and their servers as the cyber professionals are doing at Concho. It’s just a matter of time,” Gov. Wassana said.

“We all have the potential to be compromised in this day and age. I even had my debit card compromised and stolen and that’s just from going to the local convenience store and getting gas.”

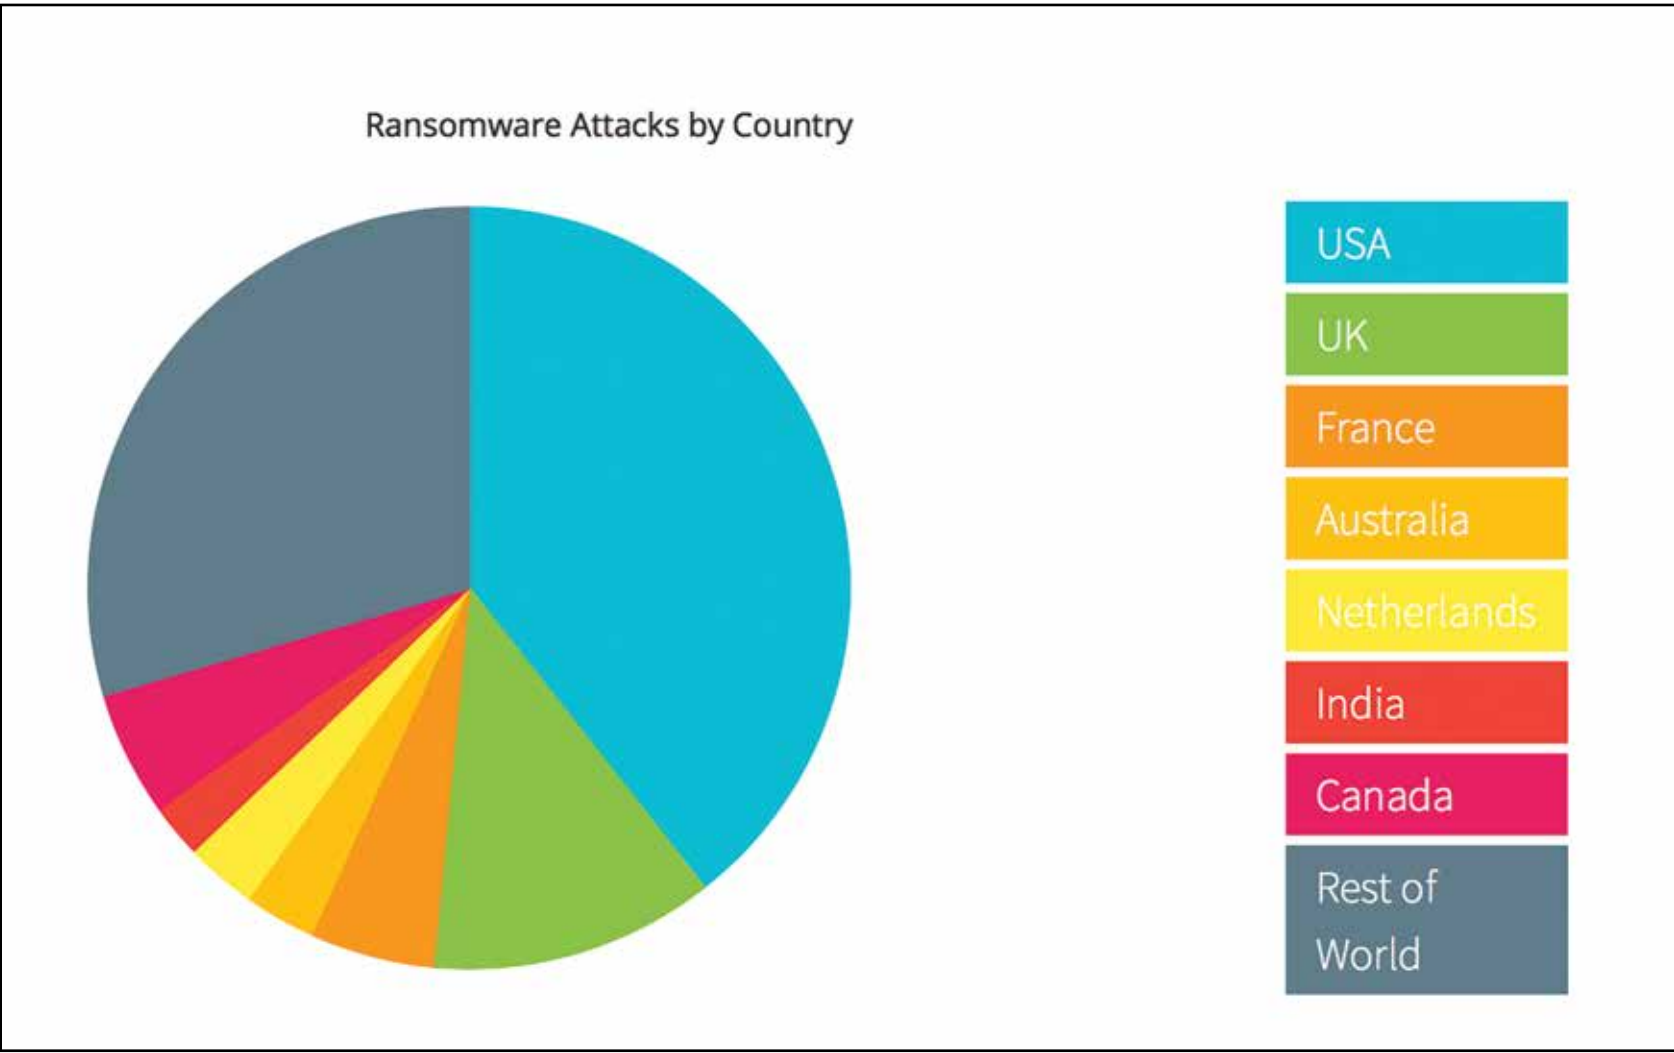

In March 2020 two Las Vegas casinos were hit with ransomware attacks, crippling their operations.

In October 2020, two Idaho tribal casinos and one California casino were closed following cyberattacks. In June 2021the Menominee Casino Resort in Keshena, WI was a victim of an external computer attack. Tribal Chairman Gunnar Peters contacted the local authorities and the FBI.

Cybersecurity experts warned gaming properties should prepare for continuing risks.

“Several casinos have been the victims of cyberattacks, some of which have included data breaches,” said Anthony Cabot, Distinguished Fellow in Gaming Law at UNLV’s Boyd School of Law, in a statement to Casino.org. “Casinos are attractive targets because they maintain significant financial data on their patrons.”

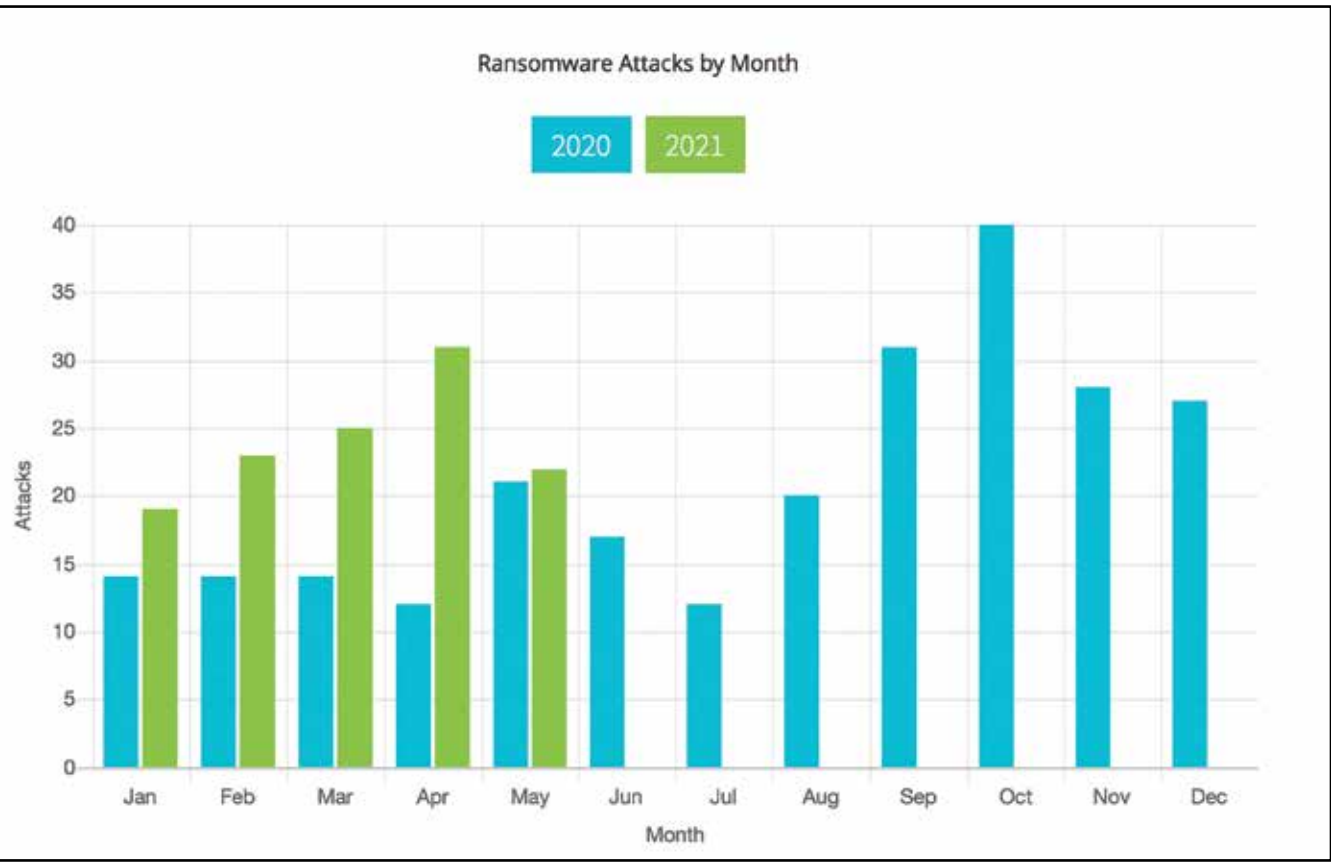

Casinos collect sensitive and valuable data from visitors, such as credit card numbers. They also have many cyber locations where they can be attacked. Both factors lead to the increased risk of an attack.

In an April 2021 article by Director of Cyber Liability for M3 Insurance, Emily Selck she stated ransomware poses a major threat to tribal entities. She wrote, in part, “Ransomware is defined as a type of malicious software designed to block access to a computer system until a sum of money or other consideration is paid. Ransomware is spread most frequently by phishing emails, but can also come from clicking a website’s link that unknowingly downloads malware, known as “drive-by downloading.” Malware, or malicious software, infects the system shutting down servers, encrypting information, or exfiltrating data. A demand is made, typically requesting cryptocurrency, with an expiration date and time. If a company or individual decide to make payment, they transfer the funds. If successful, a key is provided to decrypt data, servers are back up and running, or data is promised to be destroyed. The average ransom demand soared in 2020 to $312,493 from $115,123 in 2019.

Tribal operations at all levels are exposed to this type of cyber risk. Most are lead to believe the casino is the most vulnerable to an attack, specifically ransomware, but breaches often occur at other tribal entities. For example, a secretary clicks on a bad website link, or a C-store retail manager responds to a phishing attack email. It is also not just computer workstations that can experience a breach, but also mobile phones, tablets, and other electronics with internet access.

“Tribal nations should follow the lead of businesses who have taken a special and increased consideration for cyber risk. Ransomware demands continue to increase and activity is widespread. Taking time to consider a tailored, stand-alone cyber insurance policy is a critical part of cyber risk hygiene for tribal nations and their business entities,” Selck said.

And it’s not just tribal casinos being targeted. Hospitals, colleges, city governments and federal government agencies and more are being attacked at an unprecedented rate. Damages from cybercrime is expected to hit $6 trillion in 2021 (up from $3 trillion in 2015.) In 2021 alone some of the entities to be attacked are the City of Lawrence in Massachusetts, the City of Tulsa in Oklahoma, Broward County School District in Florida, the University of California, the University of Maryland and the NBA (National Basketball Association).

The Cheyenne and Arapaho Tribes government offices were not affected, as they operate on a separate server than the casinos. Lucky Star Casino continues to pay all their employees while being shut down.

Big Eagle Diamond Crosses Helping Families with Low-Cost Headstones

Latoya Lonelodge, Staff Reporter

(WATONGA, OK) With many families facing heartache and uncertainty when they lose a loved one, scrounging and stressing for funds to cover funeral and headstone expenses should be the least of their worries. Realizing that not all families have the means to financially afford a headstone for their loved ones, one person saw an opportunity to help families in their time of need and relieve a financial burden.

Levi Big Eagle, Northern Cheyenne originally from Lame Deer, Mont., is the owner of Big Eagle Diamond Crosses. He found his calling to making affordable headstones when he built his very first headstone for his mother when she passed away in November 2020.

“I thought it would be cool if we didn’t go searching or hunting around for headstones, I wanted to make her headstone,” Big Eagle said.

Working out of his home in Watonga, Okla., Big Eagle said he came up with the idea to make headstones from epoxy residue when he saw it was being used to make tables on YouTube. The epoxy that Big Eagle used is a residue that is thicker than glass

“I thought it’d be a cool idea, being from up there in Montana and seeing the cemetery, there were no headstones at all, I was like wow if I can do this, I can provide them to the tribe, they can buy some off me and I’ve been trying to get family involved and just trying to put my name out there,” Big Eagle said.

And with making his mother’s headstone for the first time, Big Eagle admits he faced trial and error but soon caught on to making the perfect headstone.

“I made my mom’s, but it wasn’t thick enough, so it ended up cracking and breaking in half, I said I’m going to make another one and whenever I did it came out perfect, the depth and everything, it was awesome,” Big Eagle said.

Big Eagle said his initial goals in creating a headstone business was to be able to provide headstones for everybody in need while also being able to do something he loves, which is build and create art.

“When people see this they’re going to be like that’s beautiful, I wanted to make a name for myself too and that’s one of my main goals, and also to provide for my family,” Big Eagle said.

In starting his business, Big Eagle said he did research and realized that other families were paying thousands of dollars for a headstone. He talked to local community members around Watonga to find out some of those families were still paying on their headstones several years later.

“I said you know what, I can charge $900 for mine and you’d get it right then and there, or within a week’s time, it’s affordable, so I went from $900 and I knocked my prices down to $500 because that still gives me profit and it’ll still be affordable, I only charge $500 plus taxes and that’s reasonable,” Big Eagle said.

Big Eagle said that’s what made him get into the headstone business, is seeing all the people and families that can’t afford headstones, and all the while, being inspired by his mother’s headstone as well.

“I knew I didn’t want my mom to not have a headstone, I wanted to make it, I knew an affordable way and I knew it would last, so I took a chance and I did it,” Big Eagle said.

Prior to taking interest in headstone making, Big Eagle said he was in the oilfield industry until the COVID-19 pandemic forced him to go on unemployment. Leaning towards his creative side, Big Eagle liked to do hands-on learning and DIY projects, so when he saw his opportunity to make something he enjoyed, he seized it.

“Eventually down the road I’m going to experiment with different types of shapes and stuff, I think it’d be awesome, that’s how I got into it really and being at home being bored,” Big Eagle said laughing.

While Big Eagle likes creating artwork, such as drawings, he said he’s always been an artist at heart and likes to build things that come to mind.

“My headstones, I think they’re awesome, and I like to do a lot of drawings and stuff just to keep my mind off of things, whenever I could, I would take a hammer and screw or anything and build, if I can put my mind to it, I can do it,” Big Eagle said.

Since trying to get his headstone business more out there to the public, Big Eagle said he’s made three headstones for families, including his mothers. Without additional help, Big Eagle has been putting his own time and effort into making each headstone suitable and customizable according to each family’s needs.

“It’s just me right now, eventually down the road I want to have my own building and my own facility, I want to be able to be financially stable where I could provide help and also hire people,” Big Eagle said.

Big Eagle said he would want to use contract workers within the Cheyenne and Arapaho Tribes to help him and it’d give people jobs. He is also a vendor under the Tribes Burial Program, where he is able to receive referrals from families in need of a headstone.

In highlighting his headstone business, Big Eagle created a Facebook page to promote his headstones called Big Eagle Diamond Crosses. Along with the social media platform TikTok, Big Eagle said his pages have since brought more followers to his business, including people outside of Oklahoma.

“I made three already and the one I’m working on right now, they’re from Washington, I get a lot of orders like that from Washington, I had people from South Da-

How to Eat For Good Health

Jenna Crider, RD, LD, IBCLC
C&A Diabetes Wellness Program

Every month is a good month to focus on your health, ways to prevent health issues and to best take care of your bodies. Because what we put into our bodies is one of the most important ways to prevent illness and promote quality of life, we will focus on eating in a way that honors and protects the body to live and feel your best while honing in on the topic of Prostate Cancer.

Did you know prostate cancer is the most common cancer in men? It is also the 2nd leading cancer killer of men (30,000 men/year), behind lung cancer. But if it's detected early, prostate cancer can be treated. While no one knows how to prevent prostate cancer, there are ways to reduce your risk:

Be choosy about how much fat and what kind of fats are in your diet (omega 3 fats are healthy from olive oil, almonds, walnuts, salmon, sardines)

Lower intake of red meat, cheese, whole fat dairy.

Focus on eating fruits, vegetables and whole grains (1/2 your plate filled with fruits/veggies). Eating fruits and vegetables throughout the day will help you be less likely to eat too much processed food.

Green vegetables are especially helpful in cancer prevention (broccoli, spinach, kale).

Tomatoes and other red foods such as watermelon and beets have a powerful antioxidant called lycopene. Some studies have shown that cooked tomatoes make it easier for our bodies to absorb lycopene. Consider cooking tomatoes, even tomato paste, sundried tomatoes and tomato sauce.

Isoflavones have been shown to reduce prostate cancer: chickpeas, tofu, lentils, peanuts

Green tea has also been shown to reduce the risk as well

Maintain or obtain a healthy weightBe physically active (at least 30 minutes, 3 times a week)

Don't use tobacco
Get regular checkups (obtain your baseline psa at age 40, ideally)

Remember your handwashing techniques, scrubbing for at least 20 seconds. Remember to wash all surfaces daily and don't forget to clean your cell phone, door knobs, car handles and steering wheel and don't forget to wear a face mask.

For a personalized weight management plan that meets your individual needs, consult a registered dietitian either at the Diabetes Wellness Center or the Clinton Service Unit.

kota, North Dakota, Montana, I had a lady from New Zealand asking about my headstones," Big Eagle said.

Big Eagle said compared to other headstones businesses, Big Eagles Diamond Crosses provides headstones at low prices with a quick turnaround time.

"I get them to you in a fashionable time and I got low prices, and other companies they take about a month to two months to get it to you because they have to get the rock and mold it and everything, mines pretty quick, my last one I made I had it done a week after his funeral, I already had it in the ground, it was pretty cool," Big Eagle said.

In the future, Big Eagle said he hopes to see his business grow in other states around the country.

"That's my main goal, I want to see Big Eagle Diamond Crosses in every state and around the world, I want to be able to sit back and be like I built this from nothing," Big Eagle said.

Big Eagle said he's been trying to stay positive about his business.

"In six months I'm hoping to have one building, buy one spot where I could get orders in and do everything here in Oklahoma, then maybe a year from now have it in another state and it grow from there," Big Eagle said.

In providing affording headstones to families in need, Big Eagle said what he enjoys most through his work is crafting each headstone to the family's needs and hearing their stories.

"Hearing stories from the families really gets me because they show so much love for this person, so you can't help but love that, you don't know the person personally and I know sometimes, you can't take it personally, but you got to really show empathy for them and their family, their loved ones, it's a blessing," Big Eagle said.
